Reviews for There's No Ham in Hamburgers

"Told in a breezy, conversational style, the book walks readers through the often surprisingly far-ranging history of folklore of favorite foods from pizza to peanut butter. A good choice for any young gourmand's bookshelf." — Kirkus Reviews

"This title would be a great addition to classes studying food and nutrition. Some parts can even be used in chemistry class. It would also be a great supplement when discussing how an idea or invention is created and then morphs over time, especially when the impact of a changing culture is considered." — School Library Connection

"Delightfully described and illustrated with amusing cartoon characters, this account of familiar foods engagingly combines history with the immigration story... Add this selection to home, school, and office; for both young and old to savor as it holds a treasure of pleasure." — San Francisco Book Review

"An excellent and fun read for any kid or adult foodie." — School Library Journal

Presentations Available for 2021-2022

“From Cacao Bean to Candy Bar” (grades 3-5)

In this 30-minute presentation, the multi-step process of making a candy bar out of cacao beans is covered. We will follow the life cycle of the cacao tree as it blossoms and develops seed pods that eventually get made into chocolate. The stories of some of the top chocolate manufacturers will also be included. Then I will discuss the process of my manuscript from concept until publication and the multiple revisions it went through, just as the cacao beans go through many changes before they become candy bars.

“World War II and Our Favorite Foods” (grades 5-8)

War-time rationing affected the food supply including some of our favorite foods such as Girl Scout cookies. Other foods were in high demand for soldiers' rations such as M&Ms and peanut butter. This 45-minute presentation will also cover the post-war boom in popularity of French fries and pizza. Lots of fun food facts included. My research techniques will be covered and the stages of this book's publication. After the presentation, students will be challenged to write a persuasive argument to save their favorite food from rationing like Harvey Noss, president of the National Potato Chip Institute did for the potato chip.
